

valuing people

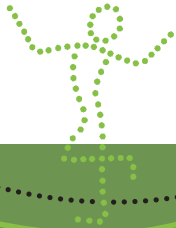

The Australian River Restoration Centre

Your 'hub' for connecting and sharing river and riparian information, knowledge,
resources and experience

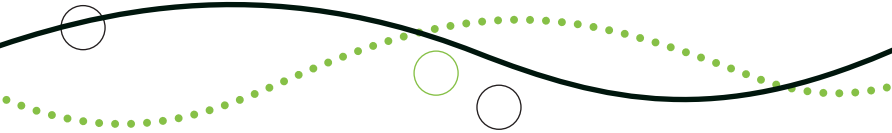

inspiring

connecting

www.rrc.com.au

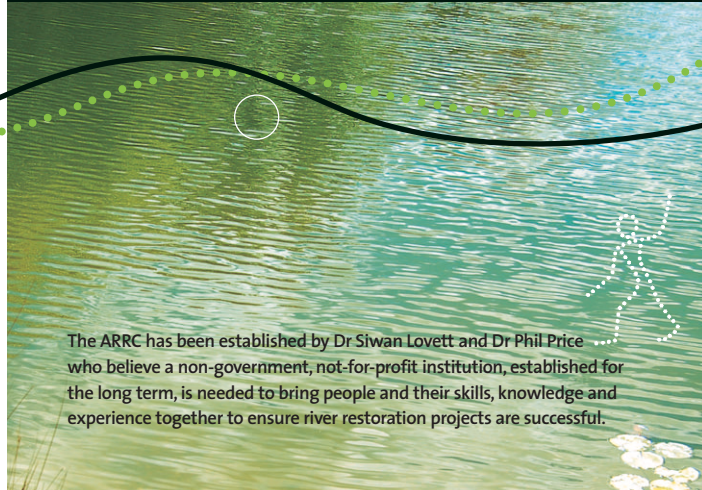

The Australian River Restoration Centre (ARRC) is a not-for-profit organisation set up to support, facilitate and provide opportunities for Australians to work together to protect, maintain, restore and celebrate our riverine environments. The ARRC is based on the premise that people are our most important resource for river management and protection, as it is the personal connections that we feel for our streams, creeks or sections of river that motivates us to act.

The Centre's emphasis is on building trust and confidence, empowering people to act and increasing individual, organisational and community capacity to improve the management of our rivers. The ARRC will be the home for river and riparian information, knowledge, resources and experience. It will provide a place for the considerable legacy of Land & Water Australia's river related investments, and will build on this legacy into the future.

The ARRC needs your support.

To register your interest in being involved in our activities and accessing our services please go to our website www.rrc.com.au and sign in.

The ARRC has been established by Dr Siwan Lovett and Dr Phil Price who believe a non-government, not-for-profit institution, established for the long term, is needed to bring people and their skills, knowledge and experience together to ensure river restoration projects are successful.